Phil's Basement

Before my wife Em left to help out our niece Maxine, who's just had twins, she cracked a joke about how she hoped we - meaning me, and our twins Belinda and Kyle - wouldn't set the kitchen on fire when we cooked.

Well, Em knows that the three of us are pretty fair cooks. We all have our specialties, of course, and mine happens to be macaroni and cheese.

So I volunteered to do dinner tonight, and this morning Belinda made up a menu for me. I was pretty flattered at her confidence in me until I read it. The first course was "Soup au macaroni and cheese", followed by the main dish, and rounded off by macaroni and cheese-flavoured ice cream.

Oh, ha ha ha, I said to her, and she dared me to make something besides macaroni and cheese. Well, I was up for the challenge. The problem was despite my best efforts, what I had made looked an awful like macaroni and cheese, for some reason.

When I called them, Belinda and Kyle came into the kitchen wearing goggles and wielding our kitchen fire extinguisher as a joke. "This is "macaroni and cheese!" they shrieked in unison when they saw it. "No, no," I said. "This is different." "Why is it different?" they demanded. "This has bread crumbs on top," I explained.

But when I saw that fire extinguisher, I realized with a start that I hadn't checked it in months. Fortunately, it was still charged.

The Hydro says each spring and fall, you should check the pressure indicator to make sure the extinguisher is charged. Also, make sure the hose isn't clogged. Don't test it by using it; that'll lower your pressure and when you really need it, it might not work effectively. If you think it's been tampered with or damaged, have it checked by a specialist.

And so we sat down to dinner, and you know what? Those bread crumbs made all the difference in the world! At least I thought so, but Kyle didn't. After a few cheap shots about glue tasting better, he said he would gladly look after dinner for the next few nights.

What do you know - my plan worked! I may not be much of a cook, but doing the dishes afterwards has always been my strong point!
