Committee wants ideas for improving seniors' services

By JANET BAINE
A committee has been set up by Georgetown and District Memorial Hospital to look into improving services for seniors in Halton Hills. "There isn't any doubt at all that we're very underserved in the northern part of Halton compared to the southern part," Eunice McGowan, co-ordinator of the committee, explained in an interview. McGowan is a social worker at Georgetown hospital and chaired a committee which completed a report last December on services for seniors throughout Halton Region. "There were a number of recommendations specific to Georgetown and Acton" in that study, she said. These included suggestions to improve seniors' recreation facilities, transportation, housing and day programming.

A day program would offer activities for seniors in the community. Not only does this benefit the elderly, but also their caregivers, who would get a break while the seniors are otherwise occupied, she said. McGowan said the committee is looking for input from seniors and caregivers on the ways in which both health and social services can be improved. The Provincial government is interested in finding ways of keeping seniors living in the community, rather than institutions, she said. The committee consists of four seniors, including one who is disabled, and representatives of the homecare program, the public health department, the Ministry of Housing and the home support program.

"It's critical to have (the senior's) viewpoint and contribution," McGowan said. "Town Hall" meetings will be held in both Georgetown and Acton sometime in November.

The committee is working with a consultant, who will help them write the report.

Anyone with suggestions is invited to call McGowan or GDMH administrator John Oliver at 877-0111, or write to the Senior's Advisory Committee, c/o Georgetown and District Memorial Hospital, 1 Princess Anne Dr., Georgetown, Ont., L7G 2B8.
