British girls' choir returns to Georgetown

One of Britain's finest youth choirs is returning to Georgetown to present a concert on Wednesday, October 30.

The Rickmansworth Masonic Girls School Senior Choir, national finalists in last year's British Youth Choirs competition, which drew over 80 entries from all over Britain, will be at Knox Presbyterian Church in a joint concert with Georgetown Choral Society. The concert starts at 7:45 p.m.

The 40-strong choir ranges in age from 15 to 18 and includes several talented instrumentalists, some of whom will play solos.

The choir is also singing in Toronto and Barrie before departing for the States. One stop will be for a concert at the United Nations Headquarters in New York. Four years ago the choir performed in Georgetown on a Canadian tour that was part of the school's 200th anniversary celebrations. As last time, the choir will present a range of music from classical to folk and showtime.

The school, which is situated about 30 kilometres northwest of London, has over 600 students, both day and boarders.

Next January the senior choir will sing Evensong at St. Paul's Cathedral in London. The school's excellence in music is also reflected in its Junior choir, which was selected to be the junior chorus for part of the current London run of Lloyd Webber musical, Joseph and his Multi Coloured Coat. Star of the show, Jason Donovan, used the choir as his backup for the long-playing record of the show. The choir also sang at this year's Junior Royal Command Performance at the London Palladium attended by Princess Margaret.

Admission to the Georgetown concert is free. A collection will be taken to help defray the girls' expenses.
