Building a fence?

Myriad of choices for homeowners

If you've recently purchased a home, a fence can dramatically enhance the ambience and privacy of your home, and will increase the value of your property, as well. There are a myriad of choices in fencing, depending on cost, landscape considerations and use desired by the homeowner. For example, most fencing experts will agree that the chain link fence is popular because it lasts indefinitely, but it doesn't really increase the value of the home. A wood fence does add value to a home, gives the owners more privacy and is more esthetically pleasing, usually fitting in better with general landscaping.

Most treated wood fences must be replaced every 20 to 25 years, and the kind of treatment given to the wood is an important factor in how many years it will remain standing.

Wood can be pressure-treated with arsenic and copper to preserve the wood against bugs and fungus. Treated wood comes in green, gold and brown. There is also a special stain for covering treated lumber.

A custom-designed fence will be more expensive than the conventional type of fencing, and consideration must be given to neighbors' wishes, especially if - as in some new subdivisions - four or five homes share fencing.

Custom fences are more suited to being built around a pool, or if a homeowner has a corner lot.

Lattice fences are popular, because they can be constructed of cedar or treated wood for a reasonable price.

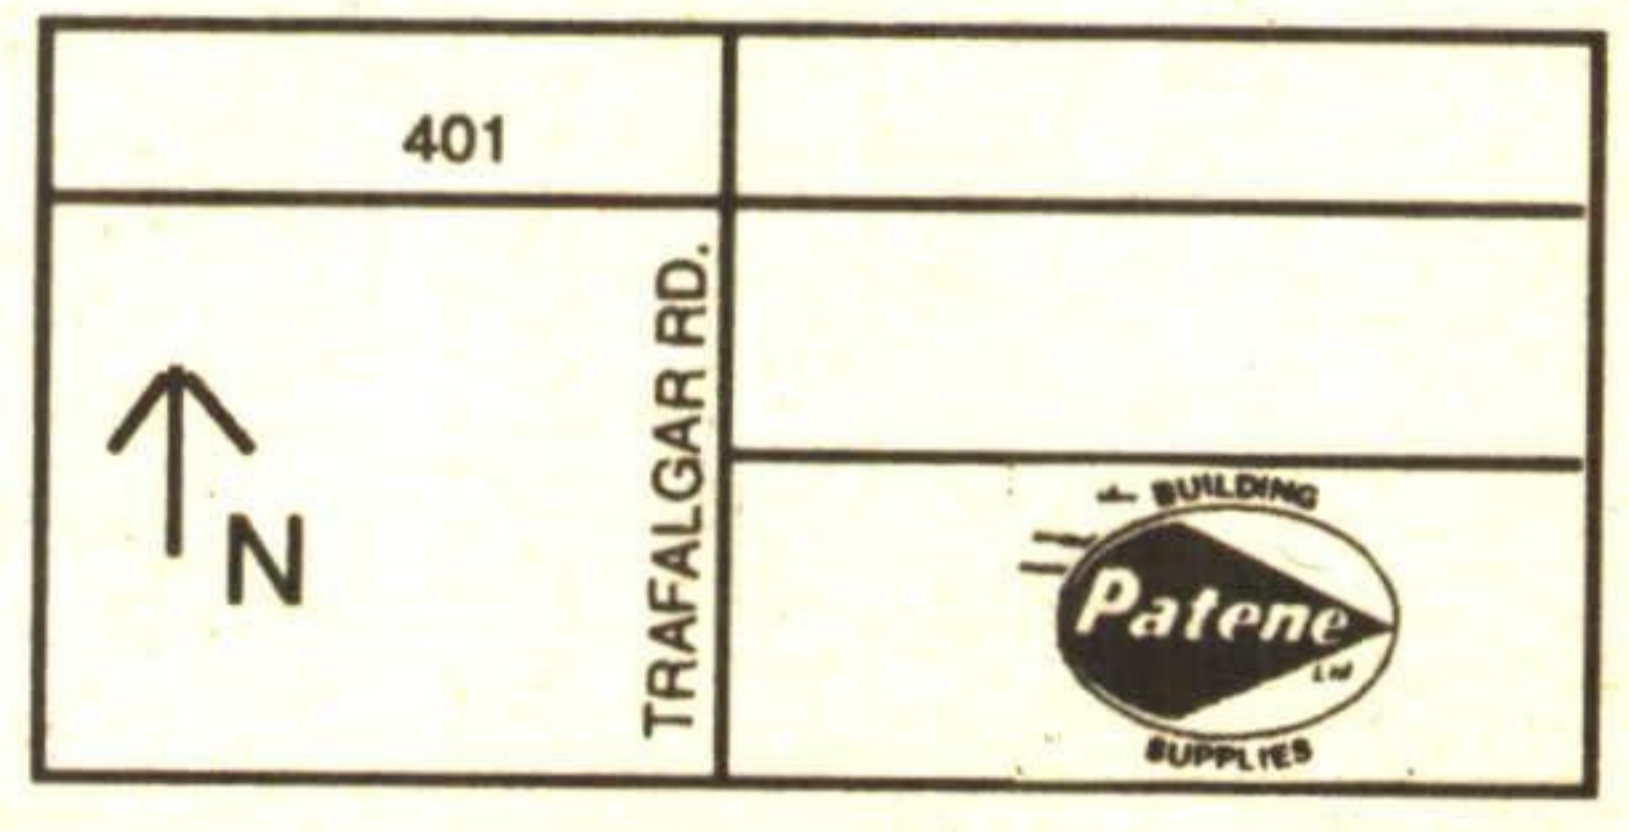

Wrought iron fences, ideal for surrounding pools, can be combined with wood property fences to enhance a property's value. However, there is less privacy afforded with wrought iron.

Do-it-yourselfers should be warned that while there is considerable savings and satisfaction in building a fence yourself, it can become quite a nightmare if not done properly, especially the job of setting the posts.
