SPRING LAWN CARE

Early spring lawns can appear straw-coloured and dead. If you notice this condition, your lawn may have a fungus called SNOW MOLD. This fungus is contained in the soil. Cool, wet conditions with or without snow cover cause this disease to flourish.

A properly fertilized, well-maintained lawn is most resistant to damage from snow mold. A vigorous raking in early spring through the snow mold residue will help reduce this disease and quicken the turfgrass healing process. Snow mold normally does not damage a home lawn. Once raked, and as the weather warms up, the snow mold will disappear.

If your lawn is very sparse, and crabgrass has been a serious problem in previous years, you may wish to apply a crabgrass control. This material must be applied early in the spring (late April to early May is ideal) because it stops the crabgrass roots as they begin to grow.
