GARDENING

Annuals are an excellent choice for containers since they provide instant color and bloom all summer long. They also have a shallow root system so they will grow and flourish in a container as shallow as four inches. If the container has drainage holes elevate the planter slightly off of the ground (with small blocks) so that air can easily enter from the bottom. If your container has no drainage holes, put a layer of coarse gravel in the base of container (1-3 inches deep) and water very carefully. Also, beware that a heavy rain can result in a saturated ever floating mess. If water is "standing" on top of soil simply tip it slightly to allow excess moisture to run off. However, container gardening generally makes watering simpler, since plants are not scattered all over the yard, but in a few strategic areas where an accent is needed. Front entrance ways, decks and patios are important places for containers because they create a warm welcome and splash of color where permanent flower beds don't exist. Like statues container gardens can be important garden ornaments.

Combining various plants for a container, pot, balcony planter etc. requires careful thought. It is necessary to select plants with similar requirements of sunlight and water. If your container will receive five or more hours of sunlight choose plants that enjoy a sunny location. Also, consider the total effect you want when choosing your plants; an upright, vertical form or a cascading, flowing effect requires different plants. However, there is no rules when it comes to color combinations, sometimes the most unexpected combinations work to perfection.
