Truck traffic irks residents

By WENDY LONG
Special to the Halton Hills Weekend

A group of concerned Glen Williams citizens met with the town early in June to voice their frustration with the number of trucks and the high speed of traffic whizzing through their small community.

Some 25 Glen citizens gathered at the Glen Williams' town hall to tell local politicians that something has to change.

"We're very concerned about our children," said Carol-Ann Michaelson. "People are concerned that one of the kids is going to get hit."

Michaelson explained that a recent development on Georgetown's Mountainview Road had dump trucks detouring through the Glen to dump sand in a nearby quarry.

"The trucks are really affecting the quality of peoples' lives," said Michaelson, emphasizing that many people moved to the Glen because it was a small, quiet community. Glen

Williams includes many century-old buildings that make the hamlet a unique heritage area. "People are concerned that their foundations will crack," said Michaelson, adding that some residents can't sit on their balconies because of the level of traffic noise and have complained of rattled windows.

She stressed that Glen Williams expresses no ill-feelings towards the truckers and acknowledges that "truckers certainly do have their rights." Michaelson would like a consensus reached between townspeople and truckers to keep everyone happy.

Citizens felt that in general the meeting was positive. Councillors in attendance (Rob Heaton, Ron Chatten, Bill Robson) will present the problem before council and decide what action, if any, to take. Suggestions at the meeting included alternate routes, speed bumps and lower speed limits.

Michaelson said the next strategy meeting will be held in September.
