

Fred Ruddell turned on his kitchen sink tap for a drink of fresh well water June 18, but what he got was red clay water. According to Ruddell they blasted June 17 at the United Aggregates quarry, three miles northwest of his home, and it took a day for the sediment to fill the spring that feeds his well. Ruddell is concerned about how a proposed landfill in this quarry, along with continued quarry activity nearby, could affect the quality and safety of his drinking water.
