A 'Classic' success

Even though it rained on their parade, organizers of Sunday's Classics Against Cancer Car Show at Cedarvale Park managed to gather between $13,000 to $15,000 to donate to the Canadian Cancer Society for their efforts.

"We haven't got all the figures in yet," said organizer Neil Young, "But we're sure it's in that area. I'm sure, given good weather, we could have easily doubled that amount."

"The number of entries wasn't affected by the weather as much as expected," says Neil, "We had 235 cars enter this year, which was only down by about 25 from previous years. And most the people who didn't exhibit had really old cars with wood on them, so they didn't want them to get wet."

Neil was "very happy" with the support his committee received from numerous volunteers, both individuals and corporate sponsors. Valvoline oils and UAP auto products were quite generous and the committee managed to gather together more than 40 judges to score the numerous entries in 20 different categories.

"I was really pleased with the turnout, considering the cold wet day," said Neil. "In the morning, I was a little concerned with the attendance, but by 2:30 the people started coming in and we were really swamped."

Attendance figures were affected by the weather however, with around 2,000 people making their way through the gate this year, while previous years saw more than 2,400 visitors.

Neil also recognized the help the committee received from the Town of Halton Hills, making the cleanup much easier.

Numerous winners took home their prizes, with a first, second and third placing in each category.

The People's Choice Award went to Ray Roberts' 1931 Model A Ford Deluxe Coupe, which he entered for the first time this year. The beige with a brown upper body beauty had spent the past year and a half in pieces as Roberts restored it from the ground up.

Roberts wanted to recondition the car properly, so he took it right down to the chassis, rebuilding the entire vehicle to factory specifications. It was perfectly restored, right to the upholstery, and as a People's Choice winner, will be shown under a marquee at next year's show.

Even though this year's show is over, Neil still has a number of "1992 Classics Against Cancer" T-shirts available for those who didn't attend. He is selling them off at $7 each, and they are available at the Georgetown office of the Canadian Cancer Society, 164 Guelph St., or at Young's Pharmacy on Main St. and the Hallmark Store at Georgetown Marketplace.

Police seek youths in Erin confrontation

On Friday, 27 March, 1992, at 9:00 p.m., two youths were involved in a confrontation on the Main St. in the village of Erin.

One of the youths pulled a handgun on the other youth and then fled the scene.

The suspect is described male, white, 20-23 years old, medium
