Karate leads Pickell to 'big screen'

Pickells credits his renewed self-esteem to his return to active competition in the martial arts. He takes great pride in his students and in passing on his knowledge to future generations. According to Pickells, a positive attitude is the avenue to success in any endeavor.
"You must believe in yourself. If you don't no one else will. I had much to lose when I decided to return to competition but I wouldn't even consider the fact that I might not win. I want to leave my mark on the circuit and my students are my immortality. I'm not trying to say I'm better than other people, just better than what I used to be."
For Osatchuk, Pickells is an admirable role model.

"Karate teaches you respect, control and discipline. The psychology of the martial arts is beneficial in every part of your life. You learn to channel your frustrations in a positive manner and to believe in yourself."
Is Pickells going to leave the martial arts behind for fame, fortune and the world of the silver screen?
"The martial arts are my first love and will remain so. I want to share the wealth and give back to the sport what it has given to me. I'm here to stay. I'm too young to retire yet. Age is just a state of mind and I'm eternally young at heart."
