Here are some factors you should keep in mind when protecting yourself and your child from the sun.

- Sheer clothing will allow the sun's rays to pass through. Protect underlying skin with an appropriate sunscreen.
 - Be particularly vigilant if your child has fair skin and red or blond hair. These children are most at risk for developing skin cancer as young adults.
 - Never use baby oil as a sunscreen. The oil will intensify the effect of the sun and cause your child to burn faster.
 - Don't book your child's outdoor sports lessons between 10 am and 3 pm, when the sun's rays are strongest. Reschedule outdoor activities for either earlier or later in the day.
 - Make sure that there is shade provided at school, pre-school and even at summer camp and that basic sun protection measures (clothing, hats and sunscreen, as mentioned previously) are followed everywhere your child goes.
 - Plan your child's play area in a shady spot in your garden. Plant some shade trees or put up a shade structure too.
- If you have any questions relating to caring for your child's skin, talk with your pediatrician or your dermatologist.
