

Volunteer Rape Crisis Line is staffed 24 hours a day

The Halton Rape Crisis Centre provides a 24-hour sexual assault crisis line, staffed by both volunteers and HRCC employees.

There is no typical or "perfect" volunteer - the women at this Centre vary tremendously in age, education, background and experience. What they all have in common is a commitment to ending violence against women and children.

Some of the personal qualities that will qualify you for a role at the rape crisis centre are an interest in women's issues, excellent communication skills and the ability to empathize with others.

The Centre is currently working to increase the availability of its service to north Halton. To accomplish this, they're eager to involve as many volunteers from Milton and Halton Hills as possible. They will consider offering the Centre's crisis intervention training program in a north Halton location if the response from these communities is large enough.

If you are over 21 years old and would like more information about volunteering at the Halton Rape Crisis Centre, please contact Margaret at 634-8182.

The crisis line can only continue to exist because of its strong volunteer base - most peer support work is done by volunteers. An answering service allows volunteers to work in their own homes, and paggers are also available to provide more convenience and flexibility. Crisis line workers provide non-judgemental emotional support and help the caller to identify and examine her options.

Volunteers may also be required to provide accompaniment of victims to hospital, police station or court. In each of these cases, the worker's role is to provide support and advocacy when necessary.

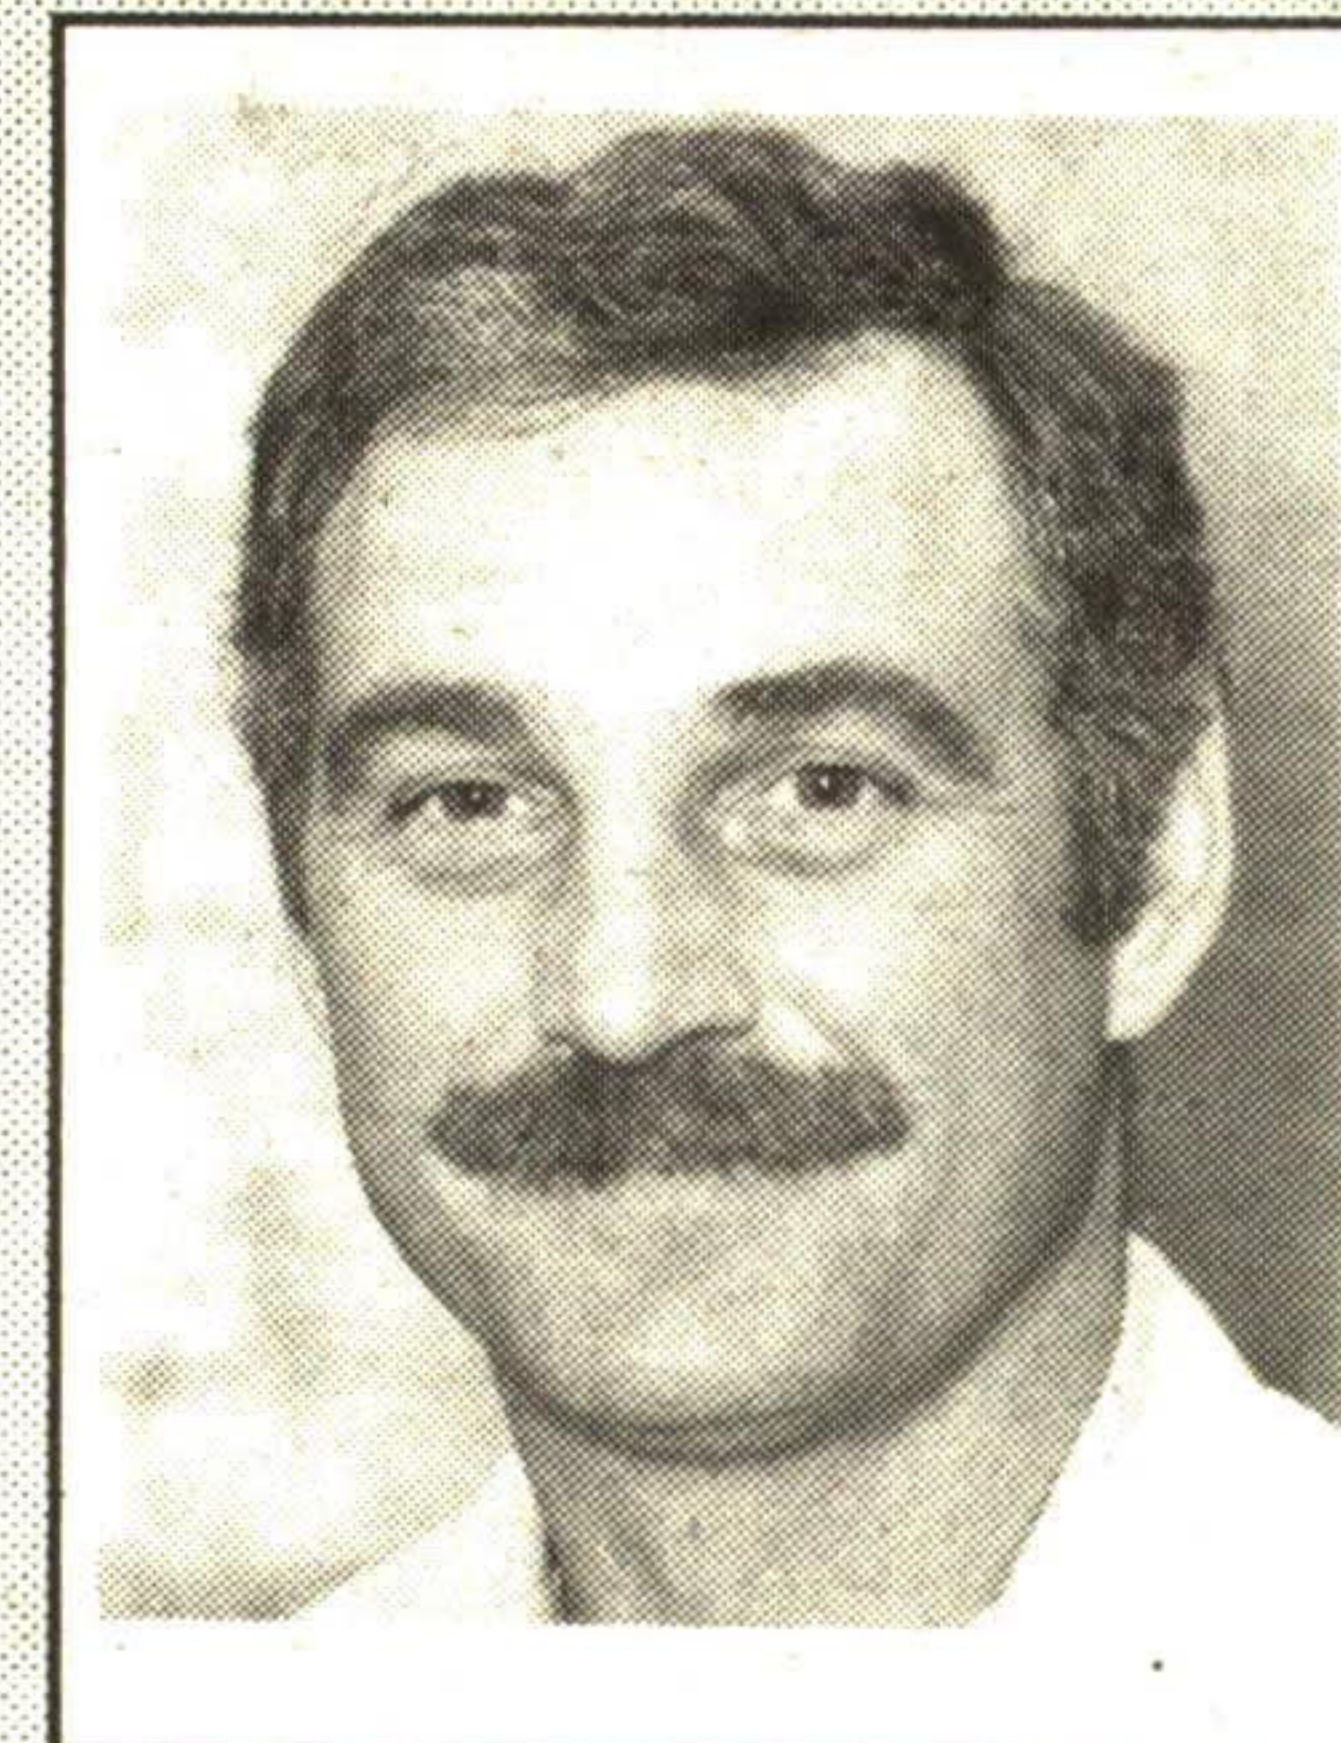

Public speaking engagements are conducted by volunteers who are members of the Centre's Education Committee. The role of the speakers is twofold; to develop public awareness of sexual assault issues and sensitivity to victims, as well as taking a proactive role in working toward prevention by debunking old rape myths and providing accurate information.

The Centre's Outreach Committee is working to make its service more accessible to immigrant and minority women in the community of Halton.

The Centre's Social Action Committee is responsible for responding to current social and political issues. Two examples of their work are demonstrations and letter campaigns recently undertaken to protest the abolition of the Rape Shield Law, and a Take Back the Night Walk to symbolize women's right to walk at night without fear.
