WELCOME TO THE RRSP BLITZ

The time of year when every financial institution in Canada from banks to trust companies, mutual fund companies to brokerage firms put on the gloves and duke it out for your RRSP business is here. The annual RRSP blitz comes in many forms. It involves major advertising campaigns and massive invitational mail-outs to name a few.

Confused? Don't panic, you're not alone.

Sound financial planning is fundamental. Every Canadian must do it to maximize financial security. The financial cornerstone for most Canadians is their Registered Retirement Savings Plan (RRSP). The responsibility for starting and developing an RRSP is yours, the investor. You alone must make the decision to invest, how much to invest and what to invest in.

An RRSP does two things. It allows your nest egg to grow without the burden of income tax. Tax is deducted only at the time of withdrawal, when your tax rate will normally be much lower. The subsequent tax savings work for you during the life of the RRSP.

An RRSP also reduces taxable income. Your yearly RRSP contribution is deductible from your taxable income. This reduces the amount of taxes you pay annually. Your RRSP helps to pay for itself.

There are basically three types of RRSP's; managed, mutual fund and self-directed. Next week I will take a look at all three and what they offer to the investor.
