Phil's Basement

My wife Em recently got a new job at a large day-care centre where she's in charge of putting together programs for the various age groups. When our kids, Kyle and Belinda, were small Em always seemed to be able to come up with an idea to keep them busy on a rainy day, and you haven't lived until you've come home from work to find your wife and kids pretending to be raindrops.

Anyway, visiting her cousin Hilton's new cottage when the wiring was being inspected by The Hydro gave Em the idea to put together a little talk for the kids about electrical safety. It wasn't hard to do, since she got some information from The Hydro.

The Hydro was happy to oblige, and according to Em, the kids just loved it. She said the Hydro rep covered three main areas of concern with kids and electricity.

First, you have to remind youngsters old enough to read and be out on their own to stay away from areas marked "Keep Out", or "Danger", and to never poke or push things into electrical equipment or outlets.

Another thing, she said, is to warn your kids about the danger of touching power lines. If kites or things like model airplanes touch overhead lines, kids can be badly injured by just touching the strings or control wires.

Also, kids love to climb. Climbing hydro poles, towers, fences and surrounding electrical equipment or trees is really dangerous: kids can fall, or touch a wire and be injured or killed.

If you have a pool, Em said there are some other hazards you and your kids should know about. For instance, if you use a long-handled pool skimmer, keep it clear of any overhead wires and move electric radios, TVs, clocks and other appliances well away from the water.

And I thought I was the energy expert around here!

This newspaper, in conjunction with Ontario Hydro, is bringing you Phil's Basement to help "bring home" ideas on how to save energy. For a copy of the brochure "What everyone should know about electrical safety" call Ontario Hydro at 1-800-263-9000 and tell them Phil sent you.
