GREEN THUMB GARDENING

By CHRISTINE COLE

ONIONS

Onions, are one of those vegetables; you either love them or you loathe them. But they are also one of those vegetables that there are so many varieties to choose from, which do you pick to grow?

There are three methods to grow onions. By seeds, transplants or sets. Seeds must be started indoors ten to twelve weeks before planting in the garden. Transplants are convenient. They are seeds that have been started for you. Similar to tomato transplants. The only drawback is the limited varieties available. Growing onions from sets are the most popular. They are small dried bulbs available in early spring, and there is usually many varieties to choose from. Onions are frost tolerant; so they can be planted in the garden as soon as the soil can be worked.

Red or Yellow Globe Onions: These are medium sized with a pungent flavor and they store well. Red or white fleshed.

Sweet Spanish: Again available as red or white fleshed, with a sweet, mild flavor. They store well but not as long as the globe onions. These produce one of the largest onions.

Shallots: Are a gourmet cooking onion, noted for their subtle flavor. Shallots are a multiplier type of onion, producing clumps of bulbs at maturity.

Green Onions: Are often called Bunching onions. Their green tubular leaves grow on a bunch with small, straight bulbs. However, any of the above onions can be used as Green Onions in an immature state.
