

Unemployed back to work with jobsOntario

MPP Derek Fletcher announced recently on behalf of Dave Cooke, Minister of Education and Training, that jobsOntario Training is investing more than $650,000 in Select Meat Market, which will hire and train 87 program participants over the next two years.

"The government of Ontario is making a strategic investment in people by investing in expanding companies such as Select Meat Market. jobsOntario Training helps long-term unemployed people get back to work and, at the same time, helps companies upgrade the skills of their workers," said Fletcher.

Select Meat Market has been operating neighborhood grocery stores for seven years in Guelph. The company is currently opening a large 47,000 square foot supermarket which will provide a full grocery line, produce department, and meat department.

jobsOntario Training provides training credits of up to $10,000 to private sector employers for every new job they create under the program to offset training costs. Half of that credit may be used to train a firm's existing work force. Persons eligible to be hired under jobsOntario Training include social assistance recipients and unemployment insurance exhaustees.
