INTELLIGENT INVESTING

CARY LEON

INTEREST RATE SHOCK

Many investors today are finding themselves victims of something referred to as "interest rate shock". G.I.C.'s are maturing after earning the investor 10, 11 or 12% for the last 3, 4 or 5 years and in today's environment these yields are very difficult to replace without incurring significantly more risk than the investor has been exposed to in their previous investments.

I have recently discovered an interesting alternative for "interest rate shock". Fidelity Investments "North American Income Fund" provides investors with high current income while preserving capital, through investments in short-term government and corporate bonds and other debt securities. Fidelity Investments, as manager of the fund, seeks yields that are higher than those offered by Canadian money market funds while conservatively managing the fund so it is less volatile than long term bond funds. The portfolio is largely weighted to securities with maturities of three years or less.

The fund is primarily invested in Canada, United States and Mexico as well as emerging markets in South America when opportunities arise. The fund is never at any time more than 60% invested in any single currency.

In closing, I believe the Fidelity North American Income Fund provides investors with an excellent high yield, stable alternative to competing money market investments with an opportunity to maintain the yields that fixed income investor's have been accustomed to in the past and with G.I.C.'s returning five to seven per cent, it's more important than ever that your investment funds work as hard as possible. The North American Income Fund may be purchased in U.S. or Canadian funds.
