GLT play is actor's dream

By LOIS FRASER

Special to The Independent/Free Press

Promenade, All!, Georgetown Little Theatre's newest play is an actor's dream. All four actors in this play perform more than one role.

The play spans 77 years, so characters have to age 30 years at a time. The actor, through posture, speed of movement and voice production, must indicate the passage of time.

Take Shiona Watson, for instance, who carries all the female parts in the play. She starts off playing Mother Huntziger in 1895. In the next scene she has progressed to being Grandmother Huntziger and it is 1920. Both characters are played with Shiona's natural Scottish accent.

Suddenly, it is 1945 and she is playing Doris — a completely different character — minus the accent, or course. In the final scene she continues to play Doris and adds a second character, Joan. The setting is 1972.

Is Georgetown Little Theatre short of actresses, you ask? No. The playwright wanted it that way. When Promenade, All! opened on Broadway in 1972, one woman did it all. Now it is up to Shiona Watson to convince Georgetown audiences that she is three different people. It is a challenge by any actor's measuring stick and exactly the reason why Shiona auditioned.

Promenade, All! opens on February 18. Tickets are now on sale. Call 877-3700 for details.

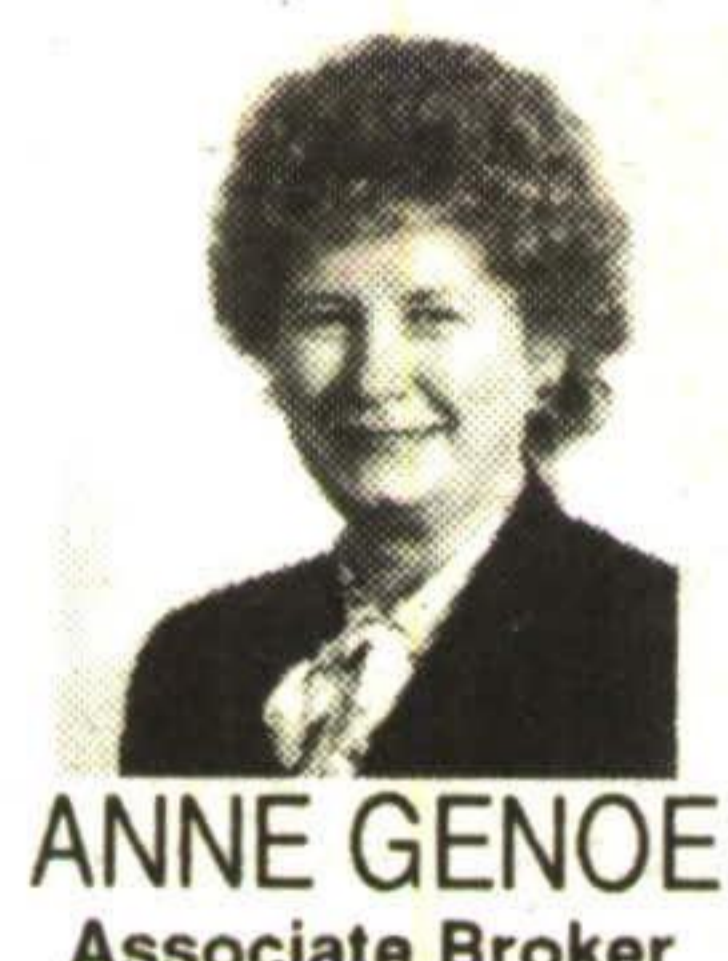

Kicking their heels

The Rotary Club of Georgetown presented the second annual benefit show for the Ralph Ussel Foundation to a large audience at the John Elliott Theatre on Saturday
