

Young Willie Huntziger (Craig French) learns some of the things "they don't teach you in school," from Grandfather Huntziger (Mark Llewellyn) in Georgetown Little Theatre's latest play, Promenade, All!

Plenty going on backstage at GLT's Promenade All!

Jacky Willows has designed a superb set for Promenade, All! The usual set for Georgetown Little Theatre plays is a series of walls (called "flats") hinged together to form the shape of a room or group of rooms. GLT is known for its beautiful sets and the effect is usually both visually pleasing and realistic.

Promenade, All! however, is not an ordinary play. With instant transitions from office to home and four different eras to portray, designing the set was, indeed, a challenge. Jacky chose a very plain set with a monochromatic color scheme. It has four mini stage areas at various heights. The various acting levels will capture the audiences' interest visually and give the actors lots of movement options.

The furniture is modular and functional. It was built by David

Dunn and is a deeper shade of the set's teal color. Jacky's intent is to have the audience focus on the story rather than be distracted by sets or furnishings. Instead, the actors' costumes and props will indicate the passage of time.

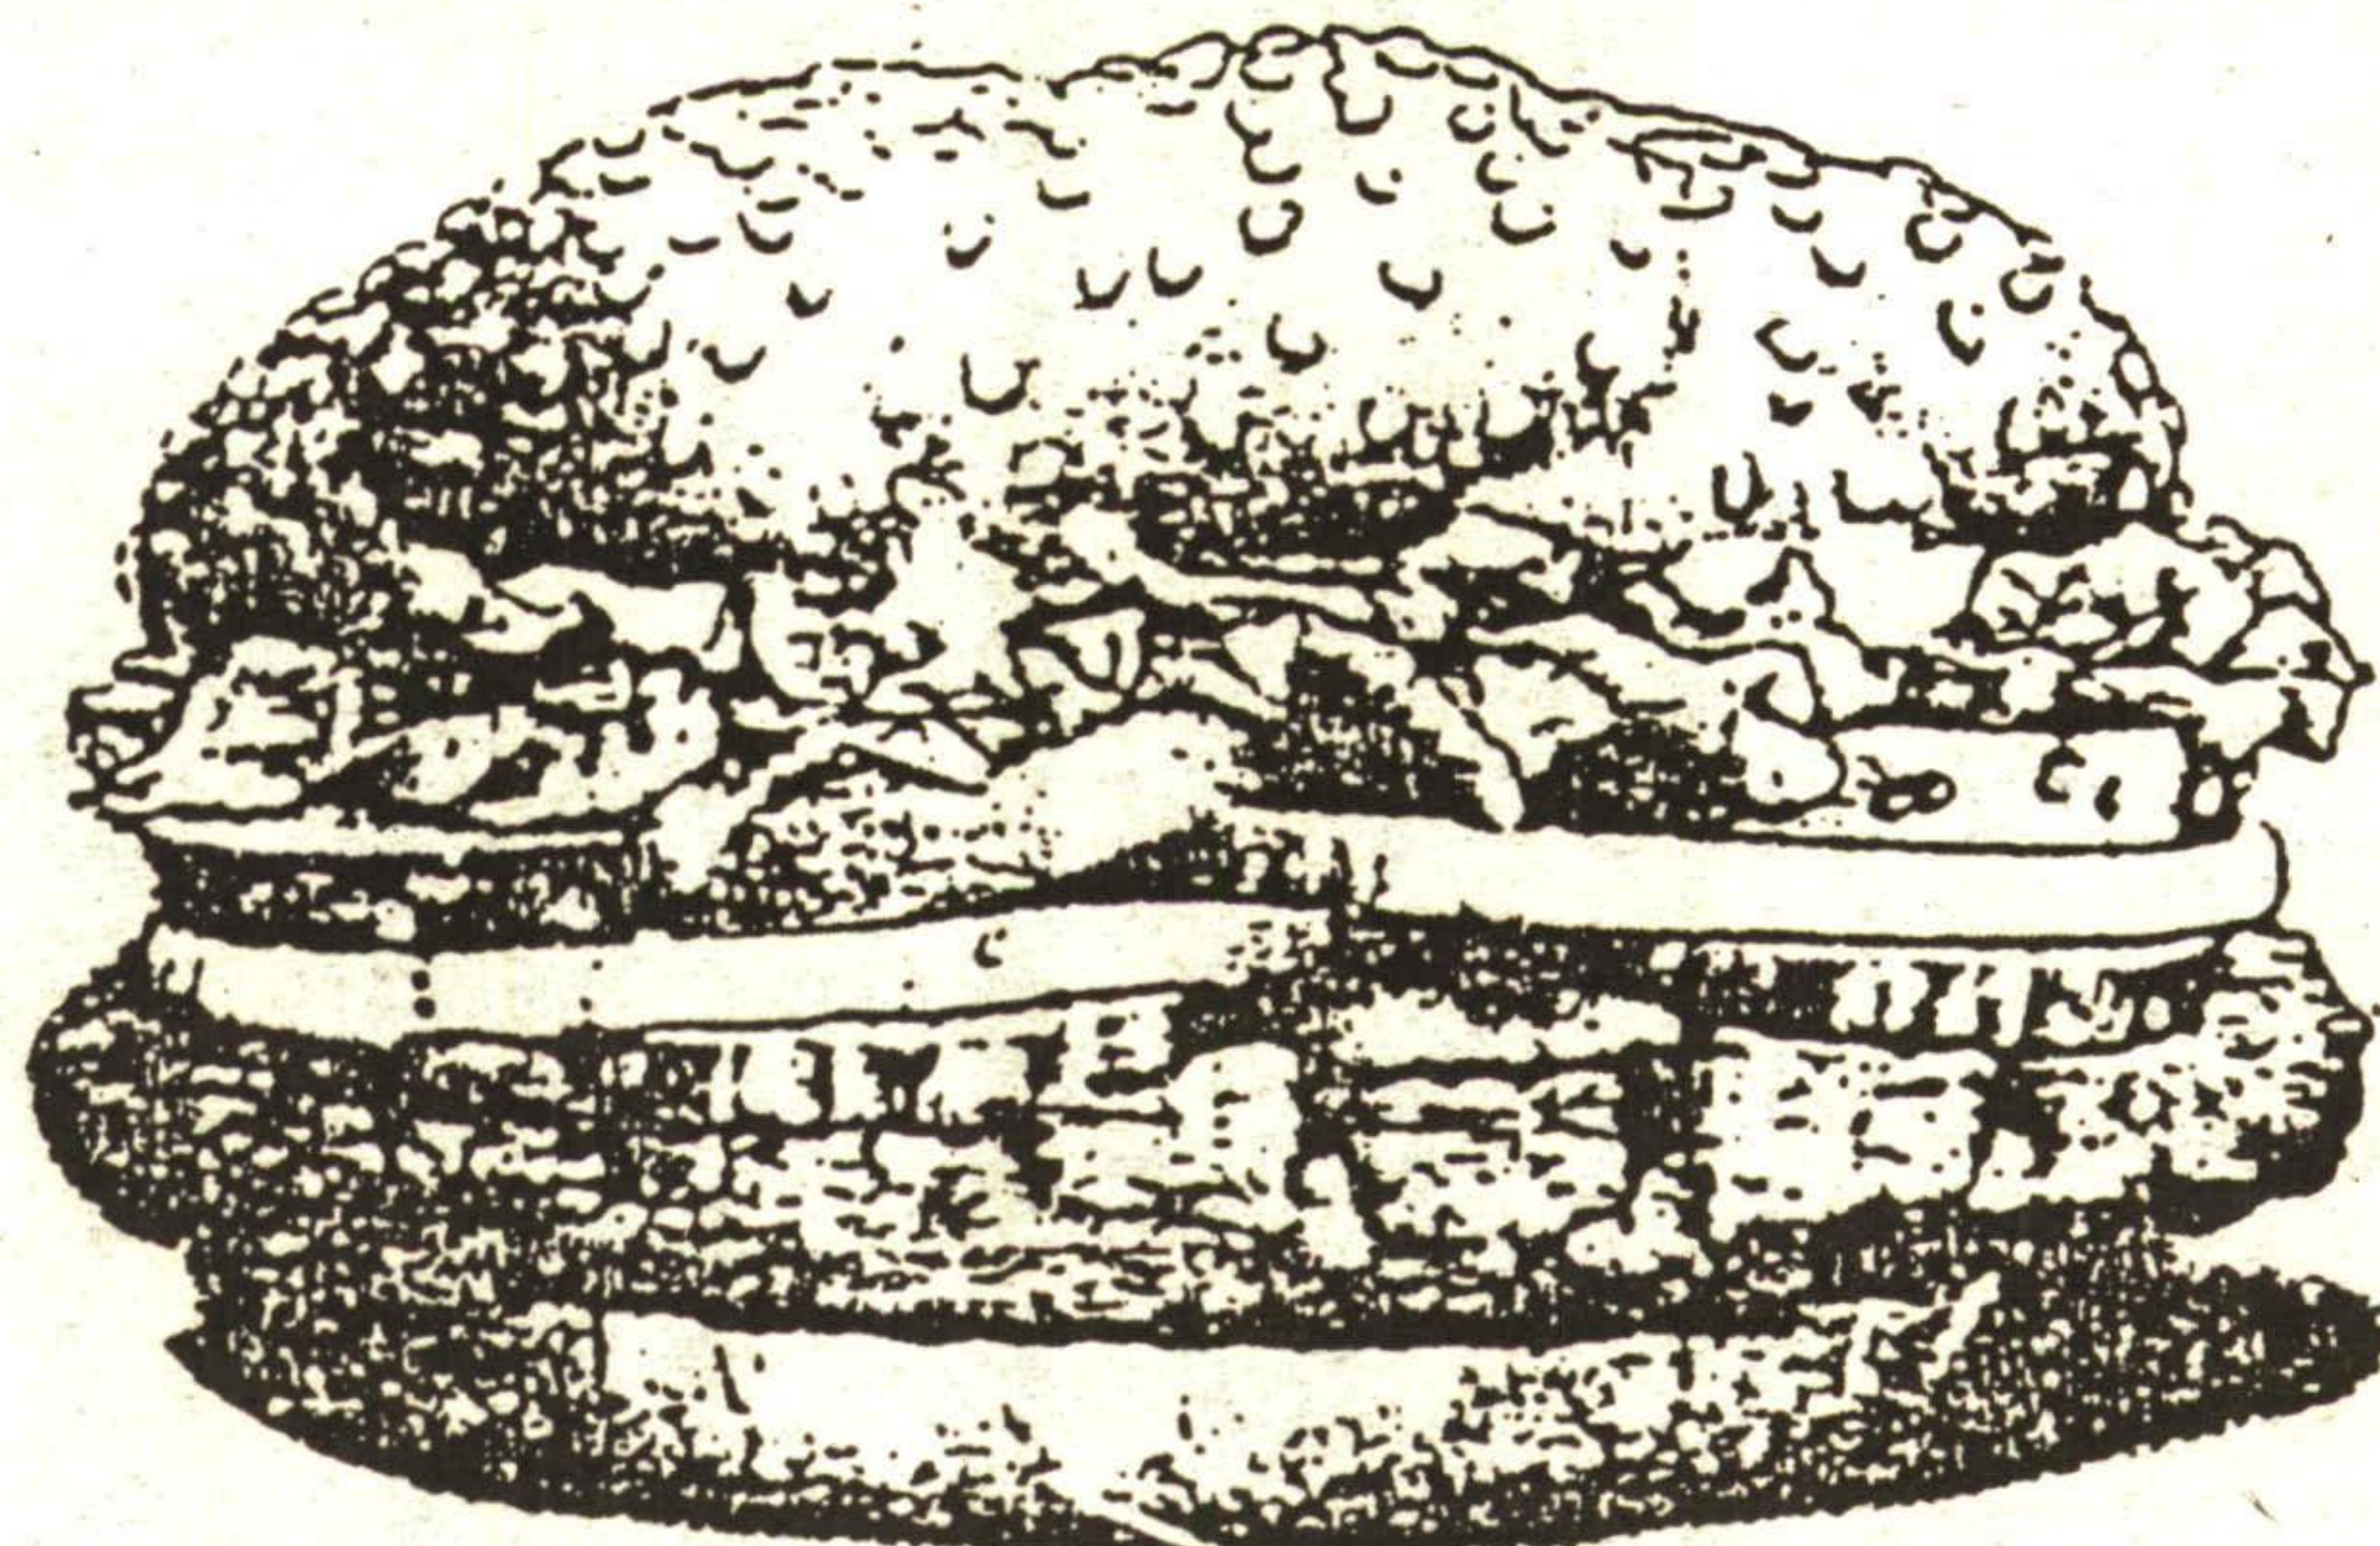

The sets were built by Ron Hunt, who also helped Jacky develop her design. Watch for the peaks in the skyscraper effect that marks the back of the set. They rise and fall in height according to the fortunes of the family business in the play.

Stage manager, Janet Raats, will be calling the shots for Promenade, All! Her responsibilities include control of the lighting cues. Lighting designer, Al Fraser, has lit each acting level so that the play can quickly change scenes.

Promenade, All! is running February 23, 24, 25, 26 at the John Elliott Theatre. Call 873-3700 for ticket information. You won't want to miss a fabulous set design and a funny story of a family business.
