There were smiles all round when MPP Noel Duignan (centre) announced $30,000 funding for seniors centres in both Acton and Georgetown Wednesday. Les Mellish (left) of the Georgetown seniors committee and councillor Gerald Rennie (right) of the Acton seniors committee are getting to work right away to bring the new centres into existence before the end of the year.

Seniors pleased with grants

The Georgetown group has raised $72,000, but wasn't able to get a New Horizons grant because the criteria changed before they could get approval.

Halton Hills facilities superintendent Paul Stover said the centres plan to share a full-time coordinator, since some events, like bus trips, will be for seniors in both communities.

Acton's projected costs will be about $68,000 annually, while

Georgetown's will be about $64,500 per year. The town is paying 75 per cent of the amount over $30,000, while seniors will pay 25 per cent.

Hospital social worker Eunice McGowan welcomes the news because of the proven health benefit it will have on seniors in this community.

"Social and recreational activities prevent health deterioration and keep people well. Besides, it's a lot of fun. It's a primary prevention program," she said.
