Visit the Village of

Erin

By Jeanette Cox

Special to the Independent/Acton Free Press

Erin is one of those rural villages that seems to be changing with the times while maintaining enough of its history to make it a special place to visit. A small plaza with space for five or six merchants is about to open at the south end of the village. While the businesses in Erin will increase with this new addition it will in no way change the pleasant atmosphere of Erin's main street.

Over the past decade a number of specialty shops have come to Erin. If you are searching for just the right touch or accent to add to your home decor Erin's decorating and craft shops may have the answer. That certain antique you have been searching for might just be waiting to be discovered.

And ladies, when it comes to fashion Erin has both a top of the line dress shop and a fine name brand shoe store.

Satisfy your sweet tooth with a visit to a candy store specializing in chocolate or visit the bake shop. There is a dairy which makes its own ice cream. Erin is surrounded by a rural countryside with an increasing number of horse farms. It is not surprising that one of the newest stores on main street is a tack shop.

We are proud of our book stores where you are sure to find books filled with local history. Upon a closer look you will see that some of these books are published right here in Erin.

If you were to read the history Erin's main street it becomes apparent that some family names haven't changed, the business has been handed down from generation to generation. The lumber store, hardware, dairy and bakery are just four of these. This blending of the old with the new is what makes Erin such a unique place to visit.
