GDHS to unveil sculpture

After seven years of planning, setbacks and more planning, the Georgetown District High School centennial project will finally be unveiled.

The casting, entitled Reaching for Excellence will be unveiled Thursday, September 29, at 4 p.m., in the front foyer of Georgetown High School (GDHS).

The project has been delayed numerous time due to back luck. The original concept of the statue was conceived by GDHS student Sheila Allison Schultz, but the unfortunate death of Schultz in a car accident halted the project until sculptor Siglinde Knoespel decided to carry on and sculpt the project, using Allison's concept of many hands reaching out.

The name, Reaching for Excellence, was chosen from 14 entries of suggestions. The committee members were undecided between Reaching for learning or knowledge, and Excellence is worth reaching for, so they combined the two, to make Reaching for Excellence.

The sculpture was cast at Artcast Inc., of Georgetown, and Artcast subsidized part of the cost of the casting, while former GDHS student Vince Graham installed the casting at the high school.

Anyone wishing to attend is asked to notify Barb Meeks at Georgetown District High School, at 877-6966, so the committee can anticipate the size of the group attending the unveiling.

Music group seeks members

Halton Hills Music Teachers' Association is appealing to all local music teachers to join their group.

The group, comprised of music teachers of all types, meets regularly to discuss teaching problems and methods and organizes numerous recitals over the year.

The annual Teachers' Recital will once again be held in November, featuring the talents of the members of the group. A children's recital is planned for February, and the Halton Hills Music Festival will be held in May of 1995, alternating with the Milton Music Festival, every other year.

The main goal of the Halton Hills Music Teachers' Association is to promote music education in Halton Hills. Its members do so through workshops, planning recitals and purchasing books and music as a group.

Any music teachers interested can attend a meeting September 30, from 9-11 a.m., at St. George's Church, 60 Guelph St., Georgetown, or by calling Lynne Olliver at 873-8461.

Making an impact

Judy Robertson of Halton Hills Camera Club was pleased to greet old friend Bruce Mills of the Toronto Guild for Color Photographers as he recently presented a slide presentation to Halton Hills Camera Club demonstrating how to add impact to photos. The presentation took place at the community room of Halton Regional Police in Georgetown. TED BROWN Independent/Free Press
