Faulty Heating & Electrical Equipment

Faulty heating and electrical equipment are the second major cause of fatal home fires. Two big offenders are overburdened wiring and and improper fusing. There is more.

Space heaters, frayed or damaged electrical cords, extension cords used as permanent wiring or draped over nails, home made or unapproved fixtures and appliances, wattage of light bulb too high for fixture, damaged or spliced appliance cords, fixtures or appliances containing bare wires, appliance plugs that heat up and kerosene heaters filled with gasoline, are just a sample of fires waiting to happen.

Extension cords do not capacity to carry as much electrical current as permanent wiring and may easily overheat. Using light weight cords with heavy-duty appliances will also cause problems. Note: An extension cord should be at least as heavy as the cord plugged into it. Continuous wear and tear on extension cords can also make them break down. Nailing the cords to the wall is also unacceptable. Make sure the cords are properly inserted into the outlets. Poor contact may cause overheating.

Hot Tips

- Do not plug more than two power hungry appliances into the same electrical circuit.
- Octopus plug, or sockets that multiply the use of one socket, should only be used with extreme caution.
- Allow air to circulate around televisions, stereos and radios.
