LOWER DENTURES

If you are a denture wearer, you will experience some kind of discomfort during the life of your dentures. Lower dentures usually cause more trouble than uppers. Because bottom dentures have little suction to hold them in place, they are more likely to move around, therefore causing various forms of discomfort. Also, poor ridges cause dentures to move easily, because the denture has little to hold onto for stability. The tongue constantly moving as you talk and chew also interferes with the lower dentures. Because of all these factors that effect the function of the lower dentures, most people do have trouble at some point. In fact, many people don't wear their lowers. They divorce them from their upper denture mates by loosing them in the most unlikely places! Some seek refuge in the bottom drawers, bottom of the bed, under the bed, amongst lipsticks and combs in ladies' handbags, lunch pails, back pockets, and if they get lucky, they are left forever soaking in a denture bath or cup of water!

SOLUTIONS

There are different techniques that can be used to improve the fit of the lower denture, such as a soft-liner insert. This is a permanent liner that will stay soft and give added comfort and stability. For more information, contact our office. We specialize in problem lower dentures. Consultations are always free.
