Funding for two schools

More than $7.7 million has been allocated to the Halton District School Board for the construction of two school additions, addressing the increase in student enrolment in Milton and north Burlington.

With a capital funding allocation of $5.52 million, Craig Kielburger Secondary School in Milton will receive a 10-room addition, providing accommodation for 210 additional students. Alton Village Public School in Burlington will receive $2.27 million to build a five-room addition, providing classroom space for 115 students.

"This capital investment by the Ministry of Education will help improve the learning environment for students and relieve some of the accommodation pressures we are experiencing in these two communities," says Kelly Amos, Chair of the Halton District School Board.

The school additions at Craig Kielburger Secondary School and Alton Village Public School were identified as the top two priorities in the Halton District School Board's request to the Ministry of Education for Capital Priorities in 2015. Funding for these capital projects was part of a $498 million provincial announcement on November 9, 2015 designated for new schools, additions and renovations.
