

Opening April 15, a classic British farce caps GLT's season

By Gary McClravey
Georgetown Little Theatre

Georgetown Little Theatre's final show of its 55th season returns to the zaniness of the classic British farce, with Patrick Cargill's Don't Misunderstand Me, running from April 15-17 and 20-23 at the John Elliott Theatre.

Patrick Cargill was also a distinguished stage actor and brilliant farceur. Here, Cargill lends his years of experience acting in all forms of farce, to create his own vision of this classic comedy genre. Don't Misunderstand Me first opened in 1984 in the U.K. and from the very beginning, this frothy comedy has been extremely popular with audiences and critics everywhere.

Charles is an Englishman who has had a brief affair in New York with an American girl, Jaynie. He believes he covered his tracks by not giving her his English address or phone number. But she manages to track him down and appears one evening on his doorstep, when Charles and his wife Margery are to entertain his brother Robert and his new wife, Jane, whom they have never met.

Robert arrives without Jane and Charles confides that he had a brief affair with Jaynie. Keeping her true identity from his wife, Charles passes Jaynie off as his brother Robert's missing wife, while telling Jaynie that Margery is married to Robert. This fiasco throws all into a series of hilarious complications which are compounded by the arrival of the brother's actual wife, Jane. And to confuse matters even further, it soon becomes clear that Margery herself is keeping a romantic secret.

Again, the show dates are April 15, 16 and 20 to 23 at 8 p.m. and on April 17, a Sunday matinee at 2 p.m.
