

It's going to be a hot summer

Forecasters say high temperatures will come in June for the Northeast and mid-Atlantic, including in New York City, Boston, and Hartford, Connecticut. However, severe weather in July could turn the warm pattern over.

For the season as a whole, numerous 32 C days will be recorded from Boston to Philadelphia and Washington, D.C.

Later in the season, the heat will lead to increasingly dry conditions, which could boost the fire threat across the Northeast.
