Musicians invited to learn about businesses, get professional tips

A workshop is coming to town to help musically inclined people reach their potential.

On June 5, two musicians, Rebecca Gracey and Alyssa Dupuis, will let local musicians take part in their workshop to learn all about the ins and outs of becoming a professional musician and how to make a career out of it.

We want to provide a link between the amateur and the professional levels, Gracey said, who owns local music studio Gracernote Studios.

We want to show people how to get there and how to get the big bucks.

Gracey has been teaching for 12 years, and professionally plays the flute, piano and is a professional vocalist. With a background of music from Mohawk College and McMaster University, she is living her dream by teaching others the beauty of music.

Dupuis, who started in a band with her father and brother, is a professional vocalist and bass guitar player. She is currently enrolled at McMaster, with jazz vocals from Mohawk College, and plays for a number of cover bands as well as solo.

We both have diverse backgrounds and they're complementary. We both perform and we both have careers, Gracey said.

The workshop is calling all people who are 12 years and older. For $20, guests learn what steps to take from being an amateur to a professional, as well as learning how to create your own show, how to find people to connect with and where to play. For $30, guests can perform and receive expert assessments from Gracey and Dupuis, as well as suggestions on what steps to take next.

The event takes place on June 5 at St. John's United Church in Norval from 3-6 p.m. The team is requesting interested people to register by May 27 by calling 905-875-7334 or by visiting Gracernote Studios at St. George Anglican Church, at 60 Guelph St., behind Georgetown District High School.
