Centennial students reach out to Attawapiskat

Students at a Georgetown elementary school decided to make a gesture of support to fellow youths in Attawapiskat First Nation by sending greeting cards with positive messages.

The Grade 6 French Immersion social studies class taught by Delia Wright was challenged to choose a current global issue and come up with an 11-year-old's solution to the problem.

Attawapiskat has had several suicides amongst youth in recent weeks.

Two of the Centennial students, Adele Trunecek and Bethany HARRIPERSAD, each formed groups that made up a total of 30 cards of well wishes with the theme, I care.

The cards were sent in early May the students are hoping for a response.

Later, the local students hope to create a clothing and board game drive to send north.
