NEWS

Police warn of aggressive door-to-door sales tactics

Halton Regional Police are alerting Georgetown residents about aggressive door-to-door sales tactics involving two males claiming to work for a water company.

The men, both described to be in their 20s with brown hair, have been knocking on doors and insisting on entering homes to inspect the water filtration systems.

In the most recent incident, which occurred at 9 p.m. on Friday, the homeowner had to forcefully close her door and lock it to stop the men from entering. These men were previously refused entry by the same homeowner hours earlier but they returned in late evening. Officers searched the area but were unable to locate the males.

It is uncertain if these males actually work for the company or even if the company is legitimate. Police have attempted to contact the company named (as provided by the complainants) but no response has been received.

The Better Business Bureau of Central Ontario currently has 69 complaints on file with this company, including incidents of attempted forced entry to homes. In most cases, the sales persons are wearing clothing and equipment (such as high visibility yellow safety vests) similar to legitimate utility workers.

Halton Police would like to remind residents that they do not have to permit access to their homes to sales people or to persons purporting to be working for quasi-utility companies.

Legitimate utility service workers such as Bell, gas, cable and hydro will have proper identification and credentials on them. As a homeowner you have a right to inspect their identification and call the utility company to verify prior to granting entry.

Relatives and neighbours of seniors are asked to advise them of this alert and to watch out for those more vulnerable homeowners whom these tactics may affect.
