Ways to beat the day dogs of summer heat

As enjoyable as summer can be, the dog days of summer, with temperatures approaching or exceeding the triple digits, coupled with intense humidity can be dangerous, and it's important that men, women and kids emphasize summer safety.

* Check seating before sitting down. You don't have to spend time outdoors to get burned when summer temperatures soar. Something as simple as sitting down on a surface exposed to the sun can cause burns. Before sitting down in a car, on a bench or other surfaces exposed to the heat, check the seats by touching them with your hand.

* Lock car doors at all times.

Kids might be more amenable to summer heat than their parents are, but that doesn't mean playing outside isn't a potential threat to youngsters' health. Cars can quickly turn into ovens during the late summer swoon, and kids can easily succumb to the heat if they climb into an unattended vehicle on a hot day.

* Limit strenuous activities. Adults may find summer is the ideal time to get outdoors and go for a run or enjoy a little sun-soaked exercise. But strenuous outdoor activities should be kept to a minimum once the dog days of summer arrive. Heat stroke and dehydration are very real possibilities when adults and kids overextend themselves on hot days, so keep physical activity to a minimum on especially hot days or schedule activities for those times in the day when the temperature is more amenable to activity.

* Stay hydrated. Summer heat can take a toll on the body, which needs water to stay cool. Be sure to drink plenty of water even if you don't feel thirsty. The body's cooling system can fail in extreme heat or when conditions outside are especially humid, leaving men, women and children susceptible to dehydration.

Dizziness, an elevated heart rate and nausea are each symptoms of dehydration, particularly on hot days.
