Acton firm donates $15,000 to arena project

Money in memory of hockey-loving friend

Acton Auto Tech has donated $15,000 to the Town's Play at Home Stay at Home arena fundraising campaign in honour of Trefor Gardener, a former apprentice/employee/co-owner who succumbed to cancer last year.

“He was a hockey nut, and we wanted to do something for Acton,” said Acton Auto Tech owner Floyd Foster, adding that he and son Norm Foster made the decision to make the donation despite tough economic times.

The Fosters' donation will help pay for one of three new dressing rooms at Acton arena. The $10.5-million expansion includes a second NHL-size ice pad, six additional dressing rooms, two more referee rooms, and additional seating. The new ice pad will be ready for the start of the 2015 season.

“This is sort of going to be a tribute to Trevor (as Gardener was known) – he coached hockey and he and I played hockey together. We had a great time together, and now that he's missing, we thought we'd do something to let people know he was part of the company,” Floyd Foster said last Thursday as he presented a large ceremonial cheque to fundraising campaign officials.

The price tag to quad Mold-Masters Sports-Plex in Georgetown and twin the Acton arena is $29.2-million, paid for by Town money, increased ice user fees, increased ice user fees, and a $2-million fundraising campaign, which so far has garnered $1.1-million.
