Prep your home for the months ahead

As the seasons change once again, homeowners across the country are preparing their homes for the days that lie ahead. Though spring cleaning gets the glory, homeowners must now make a similar effort when the warm weather draws to a close. With indoor seasons on the horizon, a clean and healthy home is essential to making it through the coming months safe and sound. The following cleaning tips can help homeowners get their homes ready for the cooler weather and days spent indoors away from the elements.

their musty basements, ensuring the home is odour-free for the long winter months ahead

Keep a Tight Ship

When the colder weather arrives, homeowners often use the garage or a utility closet inside the home to store paints, oils, solvents, and other potentially toxic supplies. When doing so, be sure to tighten the lids on any such items before storing them away. If not closed tightly, the lids might leak potentially harmful chemicals into the air, a dangerous prospect made even more dangerous in the colder months when the windows are closed and there's little or no fresh air circulating throughout the home.

Bring It All In

Before the colder weather arrives, homeowners must move all those remnants from the summer into the house or garage. Lawn and garden equipment, patio furniture and, of course, the grill can't withstand harsh winter weather. Before storing such items for the winter, be sure to clean them thoroughly.

Clean Indoors, Too

Spring cleaning is all about opening the windows and letting fresh air in after a season spent locked indoors. But come the fall, when it's time to button up for the winter, it's best to first give the home a thorough cleaning. Airborne allergens can stick to ducts, vents and filters, leaving a home's residents susceptible to allergy attacks even after the warm weather has become a distant memory. Clean ducts, vents and filters in the fall to make the home healthier throughout the winter.

Say 'Au Revoir' to Odour

Readying a home for the indoor seasons also entails ridding its interior of odor. Spray an odour eliminator to neutralize offensive smells on contact so they are no longer detectable to the nose. Homeowners can eliminate odours in their kitchens, carpets and even

Fix Up the Fireplace

Few areas of the home are as popular as the fireplace, come the colder months. A gathering spot for family and friends when the weather outside is frightful, the fireplace will need some attention before the colder weather arrives. Remove any papers, magazines or other items that might have accumulated around the fireplace during the summer when it was out of commission. Then use a fireplace and wood stove cleaner to remove any smoke residue, ash, soot, dust, creosote build-up, and burned on carbon deposits left over from last season.
