

Georgetown resident makes waves on the runway

Georgetown's Rachelle Anne Roy models runway outfits at Showcase.

Local outfit Rachelle Anne Roy recently made her runway debut as a local designer as well her 1500 collection of garments during Showcase via Fashion Week.

The 21-year-old student has now business this year called RAY. Rachelle Anne Roy will be in the process of securing a $5000 small business grant to help grow her vision.

A graduate of George Brown College's Fashion Design and Technology program last year, Roy's career path began in Georgetown, Ontario High School's Grade 11 sewing class and in Grade 12 she designed her own wardrobe.

The 2011 Spring/Summer 2011 runway show in Vancouver showcased Roy's new 1500 clothing line, which she describes as combining urban street wear with high fashion in a format you yet fashionable style, inspired by the past and the essence of the line, Kiki signature brand.
