Q: My teeth feel nice after a professional cleaning, but am I really healthier for it?

A: At Young Dentistry most of our day is spent battling invisible enemies. Some might say people like us should be institutionalized. But before you call the authorities, please hear me out. The enemies we are after are microscopic bacteria, and they are living in the dental plaque and tartar that gets removed at your cleaning. These single-celled jerks produce foul smelling byproducts and acids that can damage teeth. On top of that, your body's natural defense system knows they are trouble and reacts with inflammation wherever your gums are contacting bacterial plaque. Have you ever had gums that were puffy, red or bled when you flossed or brushed normally? You, my friend, have experienced gingivitis (aka inflamed gums). Short periods of gingivitis are not going to hurt you, but when it exists for weeks or (gasp!) months it can damage the bone that supports the roots of your teeth. This is called periodontitis (aka gum disease). Can we all agree that more bone is better than less? Bone loss can create gum recession or deep pockets between the gums and the teeth which then can collect more plaque. Lots of bone loss can increase the risk of not having any teeth left. Surely, you say, like my hair after a bad cut, it will grow back? Well... let's talk about that next column.

Milton woman killed in attack on Istanbul nightclub

The Canadian killed in the New Year's attack on an Istanbul nightclub has been identified as Alaa Al-Muhandis, from Milton, Ont.

Several media outlets are reporting that the mother of two was among the 39 killed when a gunman opened fire at a popular Turkish club during New Year's celebrations.

In a statement Sunday, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau confirmed that a Canadian had been killed in the attack and offered his condolences to the families and friends of all of the victims of this horrible act.

We also grieve the senseless loss of a Canadian citizen and remain steadfast in our determination to work with allies and partners to fight terrorism and hold perpetrators to account, he said.

something like this can happen to us in Milton.

Several media outlets reported Monday that the mother of two was among the 39 killed when a gunman opened fire at a popular Turkish club during New Year's celebrations.

The Islamic State group made an unusual claim of responsibility for the terrorist attack in Turkey, saying a soldier of the caliphate carried out the mass shooting at Reina, a nightclub on the Bosphorus.

The group, also known as ISIS, Daesh or ISIL, said Christian revellers were targeted in response to Turkish military operations against the militants in northern Syria, but most of the dead were foreign tourists from Muslim countries.

Mohammed Hamoudi, the president of nonprofit organization Mesopotamia Group, knew Al-Muhandis professionally through her event-décor business, Loloos Arrangements. Hamoudi, who last saw Al-Muhandis in September, said she was a very nice lady, and very helpful and very kind, (with a) very nice personality.

This kind of business, she needed to be a clever lady, because ... arrangements, it's not easy, he said.

Hamoudi added that he was shocked when he heard the news, especially because Al-Muhandis was so young in her 20s, or early 30s at most, he said.

We also grieve the senseless loss of a Canadian citizen and remain steadfast in our determination to work with allies and partners to fight terrorism and hold perpetrators to account, he said.

On Twitter, Conservative MP Lisa Raitt (Milton) gave her sincere condolences to Alaa Al-Muhandis's family and neighbours. We never think that something like this can happen to us in Milton.

ISIS's claim came after a recent propaganda video by the jihadists urged attacks on Turkey.
