

In February 2016, Sally Stull appealed to Halton Hills council to have a site alteration by-law placed on her Eighth Line property. Council denied her application and most recently, the Superior Court of Ontario backed its decision.

Town cites safety, environmental concerns

The committee felt the application would introduce a very large scale commercial operation to a rural area of the Town, Councillor Bryan Lewis and Chair of SAC said in a press release. This activity would have lasted for three to five years and negatively affected the lives of area residents.

The committee cited extreme likelihood of serious damage to rural roads due to heavy traffic, safety concerns for vehicles, cyclists and pedestrians, noise pollution identified by neighbouring residents, potential dust on roads, and potential negative impact on ground water as its concerns.
