

WORD ON THE STREET

With Jane Dougan

“Lawyers for the convicted drunk driver Marco Muzzo are arguing that the family of three children and their grandfather who died at Muzzo’s hands should not be entitled to more than a third of the damages they are seeking in a $25-million lawsuit. What are your thoughts?”

Ken Andrews “I don’t think $25 million is enough.”

Roger Hilts “How do you put a price on life? $25 million or $100 million is not going to bring back that family. They deserve some sort of compensation, but nothing is going to replace their loss. If they were granted $25 million, they’re not going to get it out of this guy.”

Peter Vlietstra “I have 3 kids, and they’re worth a lot more than $25 million.”

Jennifer Lock “I think it’s crazy. They’re wrong to tell them that they deserve less. I would feel that same even if he killed one person, but the money’s not going to make them happy or bring back their family.”

Police services board approves 2017 – 2019 business plan

The Halton Regional Police Services Board has approved the 2017 – 2019 Business Plan for the Police Service. At a recent Board meeting, Chief Steve Tanner presented the Plan outlining the goals to be accomplished over the next three years. The Plan will be used as a guide in setting specific annual policing initiatives within the Region.

Extensive consultation with various stakeholders, members of the community and members of the Police Service were undertaken to ensure the goals reflect their concerns. Mayor Rob Burton, Chair of the Police Services Board stated, “Responding to community needs remains at the forefront of our policing initiatives, and this Plan will be the main driver of our annual work plan and budgets.” Chief Tanner echoed the Chair’s sentiments and noted the Plan commits the Police Service as an organization to the public’s safety and well-being. A copy of the 2017 – 2019 Business Plan can be accessed on the Halton Regional Police Service website at www.haltonpolice.ca
