Georgetown driver charged after vehicle strikes Guelph building

Police say speed and alcohol were factors in an early morning crash on Sunday morning near downtown Guelph.

At 3:35 a.m. emergency responders were called to the five-point intersection at Woolwich and Norwich streets after a vehicle mounted a curb, struck a hydro pole, an unoccupied vehicle and then hit a building on the west side of Woolwich Street.

The vehicle was heading westbound on Woolwich Street and failed to safely negotiate the right-hand turn.

This is the intersection close to where

Guelph's Grace Glofcheskie was killed in 2015 when another vehicle, negotiating that same right turn, went off the road after taking that corner at a high rate of speed.

The three occupants in the vehicle received minor injuries in the crash but they didn't need medical treatment, police said. The damage estimate to the vehicle and property is estimated at around $50,000.

A 20-year-old Georgetown man has been charged with careless driving, driving while under suspension and having a blood-alcohol level concentration above zero as a novice driver.
