

Word on the Street raises hundreds for Humane Society

Several hundred dollars was raised for the Upper Credit Humane Society from last week's second-annual Word on the Street art show involving students from Georgetown District High School.

Held without an admission charge at the Halton Hills Cultural Centre & Library,

For this year's Arts and Tarts-themed show, student artists from GDHS dressed up and showcased their work, while raising money for the UCHS.

Donations were still being accepted this week and it's not too late to contribute as Judy Daley from the Helson Gallery in the library will receive contributions, or donations can be made directly to the UCHS.

We are really trying to give the students opportunities to use art as a vehicle for positive change in their community, said organizer Ronja Philipp.

They have really stepped up to show that they have strong, positive messages to share and that Art is a fantastic way to promote social justice.

Approximately 50 students participated in Word on the Street, consisting of Grade 11-12 students in the International Baccalaureate art program and the Grade 12 Academic Art class.

The emphasis of the show was to celebrate the human voice and teach young artists how to produce, frame and hang artwork while organizing a large-scale art show.

I found that it encouraged me to take pride in my work. It felt like my work actually had meaning and it wasn't just about creating a class project, said student Indiana Payne.

I am actually benefiting my community.

Chef Paul Mattina from the GDHS Cooking School oversaw the plating and serving of hors d'oeuvres to the patrons.
