keeps ticking up on the pump. In the end, he said he was charged an additional 10 cents.

The video quickly went viral and van Denzen has since appeared on various news programs and on talk radio to tell his tale.

Okay. I know it's not by much, but just like in Superman III all those pennies do add up. Should this be happening? he wrote as a caption on the video's YouTube page.

Shell contacted van Denzen shortly after the video came to light. He said company reps described the issue as a glitch.

Shell has since given van Denzen a free car wash for his troubles.

He added since posting the video, others have shared similar experiences with him on various Facebook discussions.

People were all talking about it, how they had similar experiences and it's really not just an isolated incident, said van Denzen, adding the instances didn't all happen at Shell stations.

Folks in Halton Hills may want to pay a little closer attention to how much they're being charged at the pump while filling up.

A video posted to YouTube on March 1 by Georgetown resident Marty van Denzen being charged for gas while not pumping any at a Halton Hills Shell station has gone viral.

van Denzen said he was surprised when one of the pumps at the Shell station near Trafalgar Rd. and Steeles Ave. kept charging him after he finished filling up.

You know when, as a safety (measure), the pump will stop so it doesn't overflow. In the past what I've done is, just assuming those are air bubbles inside, so I just kind of let the liquid subside a little bit so I can pump a little more into the tank, said van Denzen.

In doing so, while I was waiting I noticed the pump was still adding cash to the total.

The video clearly shows the untouched nozzle as his tab slowly
