O'Leary calls ridding Ontario of Wynne a personal goal

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau isn't the only Liberal leader on Kevin O'Leary's political hit list as the businessman and reality-TV personality continues his quest to succeed former prime minister Stephen Harper as Conservative Party leader.

While speaking to the The IFP at a Conservative leadership meet and greet in Burlington on Sunday (March 5), the Shark Tank and Dragons Den star and now Conservative leadership hopeful didn't mince any words when describing Ontario's biggest problem.

I think it's been a combination of (Dalton) McGuinty combined with (Kathleen) Wynne that has really put this place in a horrible situation, said O'Leary. What we really need is veteran leadership at the provincial level and I'm working very hard to get rid of Kathleen Wynne.

It's one of my personal goals. That's why I've been doing these open letters. I'm trying to (accomplish) one of two things, the Liberals to swap her out or we get rid of the whole Liberal party here. One of those two things is going to happen, but she's not staying running this place. That's the most important thing I can do, he added.

Calling Toronto home at least part of the time O'Leary has been a very vocal critic of the Wynne government in recent years and pointed to several examples where he believes the provincial Liberals have dropped the ball.

(Ontario is) $308 billion in debt, hydro costs (are) skyrocketing. They are the most expensive in North America, and what Wynne has just done is punt it 25 years to the next generation. It's shameful, he said.

O'Leary also addressed widespread comparisons to new U.S. President Donald Trump, claiming that despite glaring similarities to their respective ascent to politics, he says that's where the buck stops.

There is a similarity with Trump. Both of us achieved some notoriety through a social media base and reality television and business. So, I was on Shark Tank and he was on The Apprentice, but that's where the similarities end, he said.
