

Town reaches deal with McGibbon Hotel developer

Ward 4 Coun. Bob Inglis asked about the use of demolition in the report, referring to the image of a cannonball taking down a building and leaving a pile of bricks behind.

Wilker explained the use of the word is for legalities only: the words deconstruction and reconstruction are not found in the Ontario Building Code.

After a question from Mayor Rick Bonnette, Wilker explained if the hearing process had gone through without the settlement, the town could face a two- to three-week hearing that could cost upwards of $250,000.

After his delegation, a few residents and business representatives stepped forward to voice their support.

Sarah Hughes, a local resident and Save the McGibbon petition member, told council she was pleased with the end result and thanked members for their diligent work.

Ted Flanagan, chair of the Georgetown BIA, said members were looking forward to the change and some have already secured some retail space.

Marnie Hughes, chair of the Halton Hills Chamber of Commerce, spoke on behalf of the 500 members, voicing their support of the project. Architectural Conservancy of Ontario Halton Hills branch president Pat Farley also spoke, saying she had a couple of concerns, but overall, was pleased the town listened to her concerns.

Georgetown's heart beats at the corner of Mill and Main, and it will still be beating.
