leader.

A lack of support in Quebec and a clear path to victory in a general election were his stated reasons for ending his bid to replace Stephen Harper as the new Tory leader, something his former campaign manager, Mike Coates, recently disputed in an article he penned for the National Post published the first day of the convention.

In it, Coates claims O Leary never really wanted to be party leader.

It would seem Kevin O Leary's brief foray into politics during the Conservative leadership race may not have been his last.

O Leary made an appearance at the Conservative party leadership convention in Toronto last weekend as an analyst for CBC. The reality TV star and business mogul was a late entry into the race and withdrew a month before the party voted to elect a new
