

Cemetery monuments getting a facelift

GRAEME FRISQUE

The Town of Halton Hills is in the process of restoring aging cemetery monuments in Georgetown and Acton.

In a release sent June 26, the town said it will be undertaking restorations and repairs at both Greenwood Cemetery in Georgetown and Fairview Cemetery in Acton.

"This work involves disassembling large cemetery monuments that are leaning and a safety concern, pouring new concrete foundations for the monuments, and reinstalling them straight on the new foundation," wrote the town in the release.

The three-phase project, which began in fall 2016, started with the disassembling of the leaning monuments from their crumbling bases. The next phase, which will include the pouring of new bases, will be undertaken this summer.

The town is repairing aging monuments at two Halton Hills cemeteries, including Greenwood Cemetery in Georgetown.

The final phase will involve reassembling the monuments, which the town expects to complete this fall.

"This work will ensure public safety within our cemeteries and preserve the look of the monuments for years to come," said Mayor Rick Bonnette in the release.
