On July 9, Willow Park Ecology Centre will be hosting a Biodiversity and Wildlife Day, where guests can meet some animals and help rid Hungry Hollow of unwanted visitors.

Meet some wildlife and tackle invaders at Willow Park

Did you know the Hungry Hollow ravine is a Credit Valley biodiversity hotspot? This means the area around Silver Creek is a Centre for Biodiversity, and it needs your help.

On July 9, Willow Park Ecology Centre is hosting Wildlife and Biodiversity Day from 1-4 p.m. Wild Ontario, a live-animal education program from the University of Guelph, will be there. Guests will also be taken on a guided tour.

The event is also a time where members of the community can assist Willow Park in removing unwanted guests from Hungry Hollow.

WHAT SHOULD YOU EXPECT FROM HEARING
INSTRUMENTS! PART 2

* Understanding speech is a brain function and although the hearing instruments will give your brain the tools it needs to understand speech, it takes training and patience to improve your ability to understand.

* Different listening situations will offer different abilities to understanding. Noisy situations are harder to hear conversation even for normal hearing individuals; hearing instruments should improve your ability, but will not allow you to perform as a normal hearing individual.

* Many sounds that you hear will sound different, or more distinct, to you. This is because your diminished hearing over a long period of time has trained your brain to accept the slight differences in the sounds you normally hear. Wearing hearing instruments will bring back the original sounds as they should be heard, although different to you. With time your brain will accept the new changes to these sounds.

* Hearing instruments should allow you to understand speech better in most situations than without your hearing instruments.
