Bradford-White Canada recently opened the doors to its new 75,000-square-foot distribution and training centre in Halton Hills.

The new facility located on Bridgen Gate in Halton Hills Premier Gateway, is twice the size of the company's previous building and will allow the business to expand.

Bradford White manufactures and sells water heaters, boilers, tanks and on-demand hot water systems.

The official opening of the new facility also marked the company's 15th anniversary. Bradford White purchased Halton Hills-based Aero Environmental Ltd. in 2002 and created Bradford White Canada.

Mayor Rick Bonnette was on hand for the ribbon-cutting ceremony at the new location on Aug. 29.

"We are very pleased that Bradford White chose Halton Hills for their new location," said mayor Rick Bonnette in a town release.

"The company joins a growing list of businesses that are locating in the Premier Gateway due to its strategic location, easy access to major transportation networks and proximity to the GTA and U.S. markets. With this investment, Bradford White has made an important contribution to the economic prosperity of Halton Hills. In the last 18 months, almost 3 million square feet of new buildings have been constructed providing employment opportunities for residents," he added.

According to Bradford White, the new facility is a modern energy efficient warehouse featuring in-floor heating, plug-ins for electric vehicles and electric tow motors to improve indoor air quality.

In addition to warehouse space, the building will house service areas, a dedicated training space for clients and a walk-in service desk.

"When a customer calls Bradford White Canada, our goal is to be able to say, 'We have it in stock, where would you like it shipped?'" said Paul McDonald, general manager of Bradford White Canada. "Our growth in this market and our need to provide more services to our customers made the move to the new facility more than a necessity. It was an obligation".
