Farmers markets equal farm fresh

The market is so much more than a shopping trip. Make it a point to stop and have a coffee or a bag of kettle corn or a breakfast sandwich, sit down and enjoy the people walking by - lots of families, lots of kids, lots of doggies, good friends, great weather, excellent food - what's not to love? When I speak of farmers' markets, in my mind, I most easily envision the Georgetown Farmers Market, as I have a long standing love for that market. But I've also been to the market in Acton, St. Jacob's and Huntsville - the vibe is there at all of them, I just know more people here.

The Georgetown Farmers Market started in 1993. However, for those of you who have been in town for years, you know that there was a market many years before that. When I was little, so we're talking early 1970s, there was a market in the parking lot behind the main street. I know, because I have a photo of me with a little table at the market selling my strawberries (my mom would get up early with me - God bless her - and we'd go pick strawberries at the U-pick farm on 15 Sideroad, then I would sell them at the market). I probably had about 6 quarts to sell - and because I wanted to be like my dad, I wore a little blazer at my booth - because everyone knew that you had to dress for the job you wanted, not the job you had.

Have fun and keep cooking!
