On Nov. 1, Canadian Federation of University Women (CFUW) of Georgetown hosted its "green" Canada 150 project in Dominion Gardens Park.

The project, called Greening Guelph Street, celebrates the past and First Nations heritage, as well as the community vitality and the group's hope in the youth and new Canadians.

The group planted trees along Guelph Street, which will grow and "beautify" the busy corridor. The three trees include a white pine to represent Ontario and the First Nations heritage, a red maple to represent the present time, and a red oak to represent the future. In the spring, each tree will bloom and provide berries for the birds in the summer.

"There is agreement among our members that Guelph Street is a commercial streetscape that would be significantly enhanced through planting," Lis Turner, CFUW member, said at the planting ceremony. "It is our vision that commercial Guelph Street will have a greater tree canopy and this will reflect the true character of our community - a small town whose residents value its parks, trails and beauti-

The study is being undertaken by the Town of Halton Hills with the intent of developing a long-term strategy to address the planning, operation, management and enforcement of trucking activities throughout the Town of Halton Hills with the following objectives:

- Develop a long-term strategy that addresses maintenance and safety;
- Build on the work of the Town's Transportation Master Plan and Strategic Action Plan;
- Explore opportunities for roads to safely accommodate all modes of transportation; and
- Ensure that there is a balanced approach to planning that enhances quality of life.

As part of this study, the Town's project team are preparing to hold a second round of engagement with stakeholders and members of the public. The sessions will be drop-in style with no formal presentation. Members of the project team will be available to answer questions and for one-on-one discussions. There will also be interactive display materials available for you to provide your input.

The purpose of the session will be to:

- To report back on the input gathered through the first round of engagement and demonstrate how it was used;
- To provide an update on the work completed to-date and provide an overview of the proposed trucking network and supportive recommendations;
- To gather input on the preliminary trucking recommendations and to discuss their relevance, how they can be implemented; and
- To outline next steps in the study process.
