Mike Albano: "Even though the current government had nothing to do with it, it's the job of the current government to make it right."

Chris Golden: "Although I don't think it's the current government, I do think it's the government's fault and it's the current leader's job to make right. If there are cracks in the foundation, it's hard to build greater structure."

Katrina Harding: "I think they'd only have to apologize to certain people who were responsible and still worked at the government, or if those policies were still in force."

Terry Talbot: "Yes, because I think regardless of the government in power, they're the government that needs to take responsibility for injustices that have happened to people in the past."

"Are you putting up a real or an artificial tree for Christmas this year?"

Charles McGinn: "A real one. Always. We always took our kids to get one, and now we take our grandkids."

Joe Derosé: "Real always. For my wife Christmas is sacred. Me? It wouldn't matter. I tried for fake one this year, but she says no, even with the kids gone."

Neil Barry: "Real I guess it's a family tradition. We used to cut one down when our kids were young. Now we go to Acton for the Lions Club tree sales in the Hide House parking lot."

Brian Croft: "I have a fake tree. I built from some old pallet wood—I made it into a tree. I was inspired by something I saw online. I painted white to look like snow and have lights on it."
