Senior left with no heat

By: Alex Hilson

87-year-old Acton resident Kathleen Rogers underwent a challenging holiday season when her furnace and the linked hot water heater stopped for 13 days starting just after Christmas and going all the way to January 9 before the unit was repaired. Because it was a rental heating unit, Rogers was responsible for arranging to have the unresponsive system fixed when it gave out, but the company that was meant to service it was unable to do so despite repeated attempts by Rogers and her family to book an appointment.

"I thought, it would've been great if I'd been having family in for dinner. I couldn't have done a dinner," Rogers said. "I had a stove and everything, but I didn't have heat in the apartment."

For the first couple days, Rogers had no heat or hot water. Afterwards, her son, Andrew Rogers, was able to kick-start the furnace and it then became Rogers' job to get it working every day until the service company finally arrived to repair the unit nearly two weeks later.

Rogers lives in the Legion Terrace, a Seniors' Apartment Building in Acton. Kerr Realty Management Ltd. manages the building. Lorraine Kerr, the owner of Kerr Realty, said, "The tenant is the customer who supplies their own hot water tank and I would agree [the service company's] customer service was not satisfactory and it's my recommendation to my tenant that they seek a different hot water tank supplier, and I am going to assist her in doing that." The energy company, Sandpiper Energy Solutions, stated that they were unable to comment on individual cases when contacted.

Rogers wants to make clear she likes where she lives. "The residents in the building are so thoughtful and careful of each other. It's a lovely place to live, but I didn't like what happened and anybody I spoke to couldn't believe that happened to me. That I had to do it myself. That they didn't look after me."
